Speeches Which Went Into the Merits of the Case.

Today was the third day of the famous Briggs hearing before the 105th general assembly of the Presbyterian Church of the United States sternly at him, and otherwise to express their of America. Col. John J. McCook of the prosecuting committee of the New York presbytery finished his argument for the appellants last evening, and at the close of his speech the assembly in its judicial capacity decided to allow four hours today for the arguments on the motion to entertain the appeal in the case into the church there were many people standing, unable to get into the church. It was warm, but not unbearable, and despite the high caloric the commissioners were in an exception-

It was a grateful places in the body of the church. The galleries were filled almost entirely with women. Light tired. There were lines about his face, espesummer gowns and paper fans were in the ascendant. In point of numbers the men were

A large section of the first hour of the debate was taken up in a warm discussion on technical points of the law governing such proceedings. Each point raised and each speech made was listened to with the closest possible attention. Not a word was lost.

As the order of business for the morning session was taken up there was evident a tendency on the part of the commissioners to get a little hot in their methods, and Moderator Craig had just about all he could do to keep the body of men not only in order, but in something like good spirits. An example of this was seen when the second speaker of the morning was on the platform. It was Dr.

off into the alluring pastures of theological discussion, and was protesting against the action of Dr. Briggs in linking the name of Martineau, "a man who died denying the Savior who bought him with the name of Dr. Spurgeon, who by his whole life showed clearly and beyond dispute the orthodoxy of his views and the source of his life." "Mr. Moderator!"

"Point of order!" "Mr. Moderator!"

These and a dozen other cries at once arose from all parts of the church. There was a lively time and the promise of still more excitement right away if something was not done. "What is your point of order, brother?" "Is Brother Hinckley speaking to the quesand impartial manner, but it was a hard thing to do, and again and again it was clear to every outsider that it would take but a trifting spark to bring about a huge explosion. There was an alarming tendency on the part of almost every speaker to wander from the actual question before the assembly will proceed to vote upon the question whether or not it will entertain the appeal and proceed with the trial of Dr. Briggs.

There is little, if any, doubt that the motion to entertain will be carried by a large majority, and in that case the assembly will gravity.

Craig, the moderator, announced that the two ides would be heard in rotation. In a general way the two sides were simply divided on the question whether the assembly would go on with the trial at once or would send it back to the synod of New York to be tried before that body. There were many evidences of feeling and several of the speakers took advantage of the opportunity presented by their position to arraign the defendant, to shake their fingers "They forgot for the time being that they were members of the court of Jesus Christ."

DR. BRIGGS. There was one man in the gathering who did not smile when others smiled. It was all a matter of intense seriousness to him. The of Dr. Briggs, the speakers being limited under the book of discipline to ten minutes each.

This was the business of the day, the arguments on the pending question, whether the motion to entertain the appeal should be adopted.

The man was Dr. Briggs himself. Through the long hours of the morning he sat almost motionless, following the words of the speakers with the utmost attention. Dr. Briggs came into church early this morning and took his seat within the altar railing. Beside him sat Dr. Brown, his colleague and friend: Dr. Schoff Should the assembly decide to entertain the Across the aisle, but within the rail, sat the Should the assembly decide to entertain the appeal of the prosecuting committee from the decision of the New York presbytery then the assembly will proceed to the trial of the case against Dr. Briggs.

The attendance this morning was very large, civil case would have treated the witnesses in the synod.

A Cross the aisle, but within the rail, sat the members of the prosecuting committee. The business before the assembly in its capacity as a judicial body was very different. The members on that before a civil court; the methods of procedure were altogether different. The members on the two sides sat there and eyed the speakers precisely as the lawyers in a civil case would have treated the witnesses in the synod.

The pending motion, to refer the case back to the synod.

Judge Wills questioned the right to admit such an amendment, insisting that the order prescribed by the book of discipline required them to vote on the question whether they would entertain the arrival. and around the galleries and the doors leading civil case would have treated the witnesses in WHEN HE SMILED.

Only once did Dr. Briggs permit his features to relax into a smile. It was a wonderfully

The natural result was that for a time pretty much all of the speakers came from the back part of the church. "Mr. Moderator, point of order," shouted a man on the right-hand side and in front of the

Today Dr. Briggs looked very worried and Hinckley of Philadelphia, who was speaking in favor of entertaining the appeal. He wanfor the past few days. With hands folded in his lap he sat for hours, calm, collected and as cool CHRISTIAN COURTESY.

There was one particularly pretty case of Christian courtesy at the morning session today, while Elder McDougal of the presbytery of Elizabeth, N. J., the second speaker of the morning, was on his feet. While he was speaking he made a remark to which Dr. Briggs evidently took exception for he spoke a low word of negation and there came near being a lively exchange of words between the speaker and the defendant. Rather, there rould have been if Dr. Briggs had not kept firm bit upon his tongue.

At the close of Mr. McDougall's ten-minute had said had been put in a false light. He asked permission to put himself right before the assembly.

Cries of "no," "no," "cut of order," and expressions of that sort came from all parts of the church. It looked as though Prof. Briggs would be utterly downed, when suddenly there stepped forward upon the platform an elderly gentle-faced gentleman, who in a kindly voice pleaded with the assembly that justice be done Prof. Briggs. If Prof. Briggs thought his words had been misquoted it was merely his right to correct himself in his position before the assembly.

This speech carried the day. It was received with applause, too, and it deserved it, for the speaker was the venerable Dr. John T. Duffield, professor of mathematics at Princeton College, who is known as one of the very stiffest and most consistent of all the anti-Briggs men in the assembly.

Among the interested spectators of the proceedings today was Mes. Briggs, the wife of the now famous profes or of biblical theology. She occupied a seat in the gallery with Prof.

All the parties to the great controversy were on hand in time to lift up their voices in the hymn that closed the opening devotional exercises. Rev. Dr. Schoff, who sits with Prof. Briggs and his friends, was called upon to make the closing prayer, and Dr. Briggs and the members of the prosecuting committee all sang with much heartiness when the leader started the hymn.

When the minutes had been read Mr. Franklin Shepherd asked to have the minutes so amended as to show that the moderator had

The moderator said that, considering the grave issues at stake, he had never known an to relax into a smile. It was a wonderfully sweet smile, and told plainer than words could have done what the true character of the man must be to those who have the privilege of knowing have as any judges could expect. The incident that caused this change in Dr. Briggs' face was enough to make any one smile. As soon as a speaker had concluded there would be a dozen, two dozen men on their feet clamoring for recognition, so great was the desire to speak. The moderator was like to go mad from worry, for how could any man have given satisfaction at such a time and with such a gathering. Finally his attention was called to

"I will represent the proposition that the case be sent to the synod." said Dr. Ketcham. Prof. Brown rose, as he said, to a question of privilege, and was recognized by the moderator.

Mr. Brown said that there were one or two commissioners from New York who were not quite satisfied that the meeting last night was in strict accordance with the book. He wanted to inquire whether the moderator would hear a statement of one or two considerations on that The moderator said he could not and Prof. Brown took his seat.

DR. KETCHAM'S ARGUMENT. Dr. Ketcham then spoke.

Dr. Ketcham said he first wanted to give speech Dr. Briggs rose and on the point of a question of privilege said that he had been misquoted by the speaker and what he really bate, as there would be no other chance. Then would have to do it during the four hours' de-bate, as there would be no other chance. Then he wanted to give notice of a resolution, which he proposed to offer at the end of the four hours. "That it is the judgment of the assembly that the whole case be and is hereby referred to the synod of New York for its adjudication at its next meeting."

A member here rose and suggested that if every speaker was going to introduce notice of what he proposed to do at the end of the four hours there would be no end of the debate.

Dr. Ketcham said it would come out of his ten minutes. There had to be some kindness and concession shown, else under the ruling of the moderator they could not get this question of referring to the synod before the assembly at all. There were, he said, strict constructionists who held that when a man was arguing who his grandfather was, he could not say who his grandfather was not.

A few years ago Chief Justice Coleridge said in New York that he had discovered that there were three things Americans worship. First, the Brooklyn bridge; second, the baggage check system, and third, the United States Supreme Court, When some one comes over in the fu-ture he would find, he hoped, that Presby-To Command the Franklin.
